Explanatory Memorandum

The Security Interests in Movable Property Bill 2024 governs the manner in which credit is secured, by providing a creditor with an interest in a debtor's movable property. All movable property assets qualify as collateral in modern frameworks, regardless of item or type.

Modern legal frameworks for security interests rely on technological innovation and in particular, a centralized electronic registry system which contains all records of security interests in movable property. A modern centralized registry operates in real time. It does so by allowing authorized registrants remote access to the database so that they can actively register their interests directly, without depending upon registry staff to input data.

There is in effect a registry system that is available. It serves as the official source of information for certain forms of security interests in movable property. Under the Bill the Registry would accommodate a finance lease or an assignment of receivables.

Integrating all existing forms of secured interests in movable property, into one framework is no easy task. However, fully-functional legislative models for this task have existed for over fifty years. The principles and policies underlying them are the inspiration for UNCITRAL's Model Law on Secured Transactions, now implemented in many jurisdictions in the world.

The Bill provides a modern, integrated legal structure for the regulation of secured loan and credit transactions in Guyana. The policies embodied in the Bill are not major policy changes. They have been part of Guyana's law and practice for many years, in one form of security device or other.

The proposed legal and institutional framework will provide Guyana with the Caribbean's most modern legislation dealing with secured transactions. It will promote access to finance for a broader spectrum of borrowers, especially small and medium-sized enterprises, facilitate infrastructure development and offshore investment in the country and prepare the way for the impending expansion of the oil and gas industry.

Under existing law consensual encumbrances are created pursuant to a bill of sale, a finance lease or hire purchase agreement, or a pledge of tangible goods or documents. Under the Bill all consensual agreements that secure payment or performance of an obligation are considered "security agreements."

Part I of the Bill provides that subject to certain exceptions the Act applies to liens created by operation of the law, a transaction that creates a security interest, a lease of goods for a term of more than one year and an assignment. The interpretation clause provides vital definitions of terms on the subject of security interests in movable property. These definitions enable one to understand the provisions of the Bill. This Part states that the determination of whether the goods are consumer goods, equipment, farm products or inventory has to be made at the time when the security agreement is concluded. The proposed Act will bind the State.

Part II deals with the establishment of the registry system. Currently, some forms of non-possessory secured transactions are registered at the Commercial Registry. The Bill provides that the Registry for the purpose of registration shall be the Commercial Registry. The Registrar may delegate to the Deputy Registrar or Assistant Registrar any of the powers or functions of the Registrar under this Act, except the power of delegation.

Part III provides that a security interest may be created or provided for in movable property by agreement between parties and perfected against third parties. A security agreement is effective according to its terms. This Part specifies the obligations that may be secured and the assets that may be encumbered. It also provides for descriptions in security agreements.

Part IV provides the instances where a security interest is perfected and remains perfected. A security interest is perfected when the security interest is created, and either an initial notice is registered in respect of the security interest, the secured creditor or another person on behalf of the secured creditor has possession of the collateral, or control of the collateral that is a deposit account or investment security.

Part V contains provisions dealing with specific types of security interests, or that apply to security interests in movable property in specific circumstances. It provides, for example, that a security agreement may provide for security interests in after-acquired property, in collateral that gives rise to proceeds, in negotiable instruments, in crops and trees, in fixtures and in goods held by a bailee. It provides for situations where a bailee or carrier relinquishes possession of a negotiable instrument or document of title to facilitate sale of the collateral by the debtor. The security interest remains perfected for a temporary period, notwithstanding the fact that the secured creditor has relinquished possession of the instrument or document.

Part VI provides the statutory priority rules which determine the rights among competing claimants. The general priority rule is based on time and date of registration, or possession. As such, it is based on a factual event that can be easily proven.

The priority rules in this Part also contemplate the commingling or transformation of secured assets as they move through a value chain. This Part also contemplates subordination agreements, in which a prior creditor agrees to subordinate its interest to a subsequent creditor, such as might occur on a merger or company arrangement.

Part VII provides that liens have priority over security interests in the same goods and that a transferee of money and a creditor receiving payment of a debt take the cash free of security interests. It also seeks to provide that certain creditors have priority over certain types of security interests.

This Part also covers transactions that are frequent in the commercial market, and that in general have their own set of rules, such as the rights of holders in due course. These rights are essential to the smooth flow of commerce, and therefore provisions in this Part provide for a statutory override of a security interest in specific circumstances.

Part VIII provides for the initial notice of all secured transactions to be registered in a single, centralized electronic database, housed at the Commercial Registry. Search capacity will be available to anyone.

Instead of lodging the security agreement itself, lenders will simply enter a notice of such agreement in the registry system database. The information required in an initial notice is substantively similar to the content of the current notices of charges and bills of sale published in the Official Gazette.

An initial notice can be lodged prior to execution of the security agreement, thus avoiding delays in the lending process. Debtors will be given greater protection by the requirement that registrations be discharged once the debt is satisfied.

Recorded information on all current registrations against a particular debtor or against a serial-numbered item of property will be available through a single registry search.

Part IX deals with default rights and remedies. In accordance with the concept of freedom of contract, the parties can define their own rights and obligations concerning events of default, and the consequences. However, the parties cannot waive certain provisions in this Part that ensure adherence to the following principles –

- (a) The main objective in this Part is to dispose of the collateral as soon as possible after seizure.
- (b) The disposition of the asset should be done in a manner that will obtain the best value possible, under the prevailing circumstances. Private rather than public sale might obtain the best price, and therefore non-judicial enforcement is included as a remedy.
- (c) It is in the interest of other creditors – and the debtor - to monitor the disposal of the asset by the seizing creditor. They have the most to lose from an improper disposition.
- (d) Once the proceeds of disposition are obtained, there are provisions in this Part for their distribution, in accordance with the priorities established in Parts VI and VII, and for a statement of account by the disposing party.

Part X provides for damages that may be awarded to a person for any loss or damage caused by another person due to his failure to discharge any duty or obligation imposed by the proposed Act. A debtor may request the secured creditor to send or make available to any specified person certain information relating to security interests. It deals with service of documents, offences by a body corporate and contains the regulation making power of the Minister.

Part XI provides for repeal of certain written law and transitional provisions.

Although the Bill does not specifically abolish the existing security devices, it does provide a comprehensive code for registration, priorities and remedies upon default based on the substance of a transaction. If in substance the transaction creates a security interest then it is covered by the Bill.

The Bill repeals the Livestock (Loans for Development) Act and Bills of Sale Act and sections 10, 11, 12, 13, and 17 of the Pledge of Goods Act.

This Part provides that a prior security interest that was enforceable against third parties under the prior law shall continue, during the transitional period, to be enforceable against third parties under the proposed Act.

It provides how other security interests may be deemed to be perfected during the transitional period and for the priority of prior security interests during the transitional period.

The consequence of not perfecting a security interest under this Bill within the transitional period is that the security shall be deemed to be an imperfect security interest.

The time of registration of a previous security interest deemed perfected by registration shall be the date when the security interest was created.

Priority of prior security interests during the transitional period and priority of third party interest during the transitional period shall be determined by the prior law.
